Unpaid internships gain some support

Economic Policy Institute calls for reform, legal protections

JEFF ENGELHARDT
Daily Egyptian

A California Labor Board ruling could give for-profit institutions some defense in offering unpaid internships.

The California Division of Labor Standards Enforcement found internships at a for-profit institution to meet federal criteria, mainly because they are educational experiences and lack an immediate advantage to the employer, according to the opinion. The decision comes despite recent comments from the U.S. Department of Labor in a New York Times report that most unpaid internships in for-profit companies are illegal.

While interns performed tasks such as software configuration, computer maintenance and virus removal, the experience was educational and did not benefit the company enough to offset the costs, the opinion stated in its detailed breakdown of the U.S. Department of Labor's six criteria.

The opinion argues the company invests enough time in training and reviewing interns' work that the benefits are not immediate.

It also confirmed Chris Spry's belief that an unpaid internship is not really "unpaid."

"If there is any way you can find a way to pay for (these internships), do it," Spry said. "All of the things I learned in my first internship in New York, I applied to my second and third ones and it worked them. You can just go to classes and finish, but (the MCMA Studies Program) is something you need to utilize."

Spry, who graduated from SIUC in May 2009, said his internships at NBC Universal, Discovery Communications and World of Wonder Productions provided him with the experience and education needed to land a job right out of college.

He now works at World of Wonder in Los Angeles after he impressed executives with his work ethic and knowledge from previous internships, he said. The financial and professional returns from the unpaid internships were worth more than any cost, he said.

Despite the recent ruling in California and student success stories, some high-profile public institutions believe internship reform is necessary.

Danielle Wojcik, a freshman from Des Plaines studying equine science, works with the gelding DJ on keeping his head down as part of her Animal Science 312 class.

The class, which takes place at the University Farms, works with horses by riding and doing groundwork, such as long-lining.

Odd hours a norm for horses, equine students

TRAVIS BEAN
Daily Egyptian

When workers come into the SIUC horse stables at 6 a.m. Monday, Amanda Schwarz and Janelle Carlson's shifts are just ending. "I have class at nine," Carlson said. "It happens."

Carlson, a junior from Woodstock, and Schwarz, a senior from Bartlett, started their shifts at 5 p.m. the night before. Armed with a two-liter of soda and movies, the two stay up all night monitoring a mare due to give birth the next day.

"Last year she was two weeks late, so we don't know when she's going to pop," Schwarz said. "99.9 percent of the time the mare pulls out with no complications, so we're here just in case something does happen."

Carlson, Schwarz and other students are part of the equine science program and are required to watch the mares as part of a stable management class. At the stable, located in the green pastures on Union Hill Road, the students sit in a small room watching four cameras placed throughout the stable that monitor the horses.

These students are part of a 24-hour cycle of workers that constantly watch over the horses. Michelle Hopkins, a senior from Kaneville studying equine science and the assistant herdsman, said the all-night watches are beneficial to students.

"It's a really good learning experience because there's a lot of barns out there that will have 15 mares ready to give birth," Hopkins said. "They'll pay really good for you to sit out there at night and watch the mares."

Hopkins spends much of her time at the stable. She has various jobs, including cleaning stalls, dumping manure spreader, running the tractor and feeding the horses. The recent storm has kept her busy, as a river of water had flooded the stable.

"I was shoveling water out the door," Hopkins said. "I had another mini creek going down the pasture."

Some students watch over the pregnant mares and others clean and run the stable, but a final group of students ride the horses. This group is split into three classes for beginning, intermediate and advanced horse riders.

The beginning class, which consists of students with little or no experience in riding horses, spent the entire semester learning to ride. Tom Scianna said he had only been on two trail rides before college, so the class was a new experience for him.

Scianna and another student, Cathy Kaczmarczyk, brushed their horse for the day, Lil Guy, before heading out to ride.

"We get to pick each class. It's kind of first-come, first-served for the better horses," Scianna said. "If you're here first, you pick Sunday or Fantasia. If you're last, you're stuck with Elvis or Rose."

Hopkins said the various jobs students perform in the equine science program prepare them for the job market. From trainers to jockeys and working for breeding programs and registries, she said students dabble in a bit of everything before graduating. She said students also get to work with many different horse breeds as well, including an Irish Spot Horse and an Arabian Stallion.

"You definitely have to have a love for horses. You want to be happy," Hopkins said. "You somewhat look at it as a hobby, but I look at it as a career. If you work your butt off and you strive to be really good, you can get somewhere."

Not only are horses a way of life, but they even serve as therapy for Schwarz.

"If I'm having a hard time, a hard day, a hard anything, going out and visiting the horses just brings a smile to my face," Schwarz said.

Library extends hours for finals

RYAN VOYLES
Daily Egyptian

Students waiting to cram until the sun begins to rise will have their chance the next two weeks at Morris Library.

Starting this week, Morris Library has those late-night crunches covered.

Susan Tullis, associate dean of information services at Morris Library, said the coffee shop study area, the computer lab and the rotunda on the first floor will be open from 3 a.m. Sunday thru Thursday and until midnight

Friday and Saturday for the next two weeks. The extension will last until May 12.

Tullis said it's important to have these areas of the library open, especially during finals week.

"Unlike me, some people actually like to work and study at night," she said. "We know and have seen an increase in students studying here, and the closer we come to finals, the more students I expect to be coming in stressed out about finishing up their papers at the last second."

Tom Gibbons, a freshman from Berwyn studying administrative justice, said the extended hours would allow him to get back into the routine he had during his fall semester finals.

"With the longer hours last semester, I was able to cram as much studying and work as I needed to without worrying," he said. "It's nice to know that if I need to study late into the night, I have the library to fall back on and work at."

Gibbons said although he plans to study, he is not too worried about finals.

Council to vote on water rate hike

NICK JOHNSON
Daily Egyptian

The City Council has a proposal to raise the city's water rates for commercial and residential customers from $3.19 per 1,000 gallons to $3.35 on its agenda today.

The 5 percent rate increase will go toward funding a number of capital projects such as the relocation of a waterline, construction of a new storm water basin and other improvements in the waterline system, City Manager Allen Gill said.

Costs of maintaining the system have also gone up since the council approved a 5 percent rate increase last year, Gill said.

"Past studies have shown that the city is on the low side on our rate structures," Gill said.

Councilman Joel Fritzel said he doesn't expect any council opposition to the increase.

The water and sewer fund is separate from the general fund, which provides payroll and community organization funding, Fritzel said.

"As costs goes up, we have to raise the rate at the user fee," Fritzel said. "It goes back into water and sewer services."

The city has budgeted a water rate study for the summer that will look at costs of operation for the water and sewer system, the cost of projected improvements that will be needed in the next 20 years and how to best obtain those funds, Gill said.

The city will also look at alternative rate structures and compare its own with other communities, he said. In other business, the council plans to recognize two Carbondale Community High School seniors as Mayoral Scholarship recipients. The $500 scholarship is given each May and is awarded to middle and high school students who go above and beyond expectations through role modeling and community service. The scholarships are partially funded by ticket revenue from the State of the City Address luncheon earlier in the year.

Additionally, four Carbondale locations — 601 W. Walnut St., 808 W. Walnut St., 705 W. Main St. and the Varsity Center for the Arts — will be presented with the city's 2010 Historic Preservation Awards.

Engineering students make bus stops sizzle

66 Everything in ... our world is overusing energy. There are other alternatives.

— Aaron Mallory
senior in electrical engineering

MICHARA CANTY
Daily Egyptian

Staying warm at the bus stop in the winter is a breeze for Aaron Mallory and his engineering colleagues.

Students from the College of Engineering gave a demonstration of a wind turbine-powered bus stop shelter Friday. The students worked for five months to merge mechanical and electrical engineering concepts to create a wind turbine prototype using renewable energy for their senior design project.

"Everything in ... our world is overusing energy. There are other alternatives," said Mallory, a senior from Chicago studying electrical engineering.

Morteza Daneshdoost, a professor of electrical and computer engineering, said he tried to inspire students to further their interests in renewable energy within his summer course Alternative Energy, which focused on various energy resources and their benefits.

"As a faculty member, I am satisfied. I know that I reached my students to pursue success in renewable energy," Daneshdoost said. "This is why we (faculty) are here. It's amazing how the younger generation (can) come up with these ideas."

The design was primarily focused on improving conditions for bus commuters in Chicago during winter, Mallory said.

Along with providing a seating area for commuters, the bus stop shelter provides heat to increase the comfort level of public transportation.

GENNA ORD | DAILY EGYPTIAN

from Mascoutah, Jawad Zureigat, from Jordan, Olanrewaju Adeniyi, from Belleville, and Aaron Mallory, from Flossmoor, said they have been working on the idea all semester.

The wind turbine prototype is activated by wind accumulation, said Alex Singleton, a senior from Mascoutah studying mechanical engineering. He said the structure mirrors a vertical windmill that grabs wind from any direction. When wind blows at certain speeds, it creates voltage, he said. At 14 volts the battery produces an electrical charge sufficient for heat production, he said.

The design relies on renewable energy, contrasting from present infrastructures powered by fossil fuels and coal that pollute the environment, Mallory said.

According to Chicago Press Release

Services report issued Oct. 23, 2009, the U.S. Department of Energy plans to invest $8 million to improve wind generation, specifically wind turbine developments. SIUC, along with universities from all over the country, will receive a piece of that grant.

SIUC is seeking to improve the efficiency of wind turbine models, Daneshdoost said. He said "the school's objective is to find new mediums of incorporating renewable energy in other present energy systems already established. He said projects such as the bus stop booth are just a start.

The wind turbine is applicable to all locations, but it must be permissible and cost effective, Singleton said. It can also produce electricity for applications other than heat, such as air conditioning in humid, urban areas, he said.

"It's great having an idea and then the opportunity to pursue it to make it realistic," Mallory said. "It starts with the youth. They need to be educated on renewable energy for the future."

Chris Miller, 29, poses for a portrait Sunday at Harbaugh's Cafe. Miller said he grew up in Carbondale and has been back in the area for around five months after finishing a nine-year military career in which he was awarded a Purple Heart.

Local veteran gets national spotlight

"Some people pass this off as an environmental message. It's not. This is about national security. It's about young men and women that we all know getting killed."

— Chris Miller
Open University senior

Recognition extends from military to wind turbines

DEREK ROBBINS
Daily Egyptian

Chris Miller is out of the military, but through a national advertising campaign he said he hopes to inform citizens about soldiers' needs.

Miller, a senior studying law at Open University in Milton Keynes, United Kingdom, was born and raised in Carbondale and graduated from Carbondale Community High School in 1999. From there, Miller joined the Army, where he received the Purple Heart award.

Miller got out of the Army in 2008 and then joined Operation Free and votevets.org, both organizations comprised of former military personnel concerned with climate change and looking for alternatives to fossil fuels.

Through Operation Free, Miller was selected to be part of a national advertising campaign, which ties U.S. dependency on foreign oil to funding Iranian terrorist activities.

Miller said he was glad to be a part of the campaign.

"I feel good talking about it," Miller said. "Some people pass this off as an environmental message. It's not. This is about national security; it's about young men and women that we all know getting killed."

Miller got involved in the campaign because he has seen the damage that can be caused by giving foreign countries more money, he said.

"In the ad I talk about a new weapon insurgency used in Iraq, an EFP, an explosive form projectile," Miller said. "I have seen its effects many times. Three days before this soldier was supposed to go home, an EFP went through one side of the truck, through the seat, through him and got lodged in the driver's seat. This was pretty much the last mission he was supposed to go on, and he got killed by one of those things."

An EFP is a type of weapon designed specifically to penetrate armor, Miller said.

Miller earned his Purple Heart by experiencing an improvised explosive device, not an EFP, he said. Improvised explosive devices are usually made out of artillery rounds or grenades and are not used in typical warfare methods, he said.

Miller said he was on a combat mission when a suicide bomber drove a truck into the side of his vehicle, causing shrapnel damage to his face and neck.

Miller said he was lucky.

"It was a huge explosion. I was just fortunate that the major chunks somehow missed me," Miller said. "I spent a couple of days recovering, thanking God for what I got, given how huge of an explosion it was. I returned to duty two days later."

Communications Director of Operation Free David Solimini said Miller was the kind of person he was looking for to be a part of the advertising campaign.

"Chris is smart, articulate and fun to work with," Solimini said. "He's exactly the type of (soldier) who is being killed in Iraq and now Afghanistan by Iranian-created weapons. Every day we don't pass clean energy legislation is a chance we pass up taking away 100 million from Iran."

Solimini said he feels Miller's story is relatable and can help people appreciate Miller's time in the military.

Miller's wife, Hannah Seyffert, said the ad campaign was something that made Miller happy.

"That's what he wanted to do; he wanted to get involved in politics and be a part of something that can have influence," Seyffert said. "He was excited to go to Washington and meet people."

Seyffert said Miller plans to continue to be involved with politics.

"He really loves doing that; it's what he always wanted to do," Seyffert said. "He's not the type of person to just sit around and watch."

Curry and Ketchum, along with three other members of OOPS! Entertainment were promoting "1 Women Show," which focuses on different types of women and their stories. "We shouldn't judge people because of the way they act, because we don't know their story," said Donald Chamberlain, a sophomore from Carbondale studying paralegal studies. The show premieres Thursday in the Student Center Auditorium.

SIUC'S 'TALENTED TENTH'

ISAAC SMITH | DAILY EGYPTIAN

WE GOT PAID TO WRITE THIS (and that's the way it should be)

Taking an internship is key to making connections and gaining the invaluable experience needed to land a job after graduation.

It is a safe bet that more than a few SIUC students have taken one unpaid.

The DAILY EGYPTIAN admits that if an unpaid opportunity through the New York Times or National Geographic presented itself, none of us would give a second thought about accepting, and that's why there might be little reason to believe the cycle couldn't keep going this way — after all, if a student knows what future employers will want, that student will work for free and treat the work as an investment.

But a model that accommodates this uses a student's hope as capital and an intangible, "invaluable" material as its supply.

Students in this country are already expected to invest so many hard-earned dollars into the institutional structures that lead to an education, and no one — not even those eager for a leg up — should have to work for free.

Do many share our sentiment? It depends.

Can the argument, "If a student is willing to, who are we to stop them?" really stand up anymore?

The country is about to find out.

Immediate advantage

With officials in California, Oregon and other states convinced that unpaid internships violate minimum wage laws, the U.S. Department of Labor is initiating investigations into companies that are failing to pay interns legally based on six criteria.

If a student works on something, such as a film production, and plays any role that helps benefit that production, they are probably owed a wage for what the DOL knows as "an immediate advantage" — but what the rest of us know as work.

And while some argue the employer is at a disadvantage because they must train the intern, there is a learning curve that comes with any new position.

Any newly hired professional would have to learn the company's way of doing things — and they require a professional's salary.

Paid internships are beneficial experiences for both the intern and the employer because both have a financial investment for the intern's duration with the company, leading to a more productive learning experience for the student.

There is a big difference between running for coffee and animating Mickey Mouse's ears, and while being the coffee gofer may not arguably be to the advantage of the employer, it certainly is not "to the benefit of the intern" or "similar to the training found in a vocational school or academic setting" which also makes it illegal.

Students are not asking for a professional paycheck, just minimum wage or a stipend — enough to cover living expenses while they fulfill their internships.

Employers, if you want to benefit from an intern — that is the point isn't it? — then expect to pay for it.

Advancing the privileged

Unpaid internships, by their nature, advance those who are well off and discriminate against students from a lower class. Not everyone can afford to work for free.

FRANKIE OSTELLO | DAILY EGYPTIAN

It is not practical when you are a college student attending school off loans and have one or two part-time jobs to cover other expenses, and with the recession there are more low-income students than ever being accepted into universities that are trying to raise their own revenues.

If students cannot take advantage of internship opportunities, they are less competitive for entry-level jobs after graduation.

This is unacceptable for most students, and the result is they see no choice but to work twice as hard to reap the same rewards.

Is there a difference between this and a person working in a factory for $2 an hour under horrible conditions to put food on the table?

Most unpaid internships are the sweatshops of the twenty-first century.

Society turns the other way under the pretense that it is that person's choice, when in reality there is no choice.

Call to action

Internship coordinators should guide students toward internships that pay and take a closer look to the legality of the internships being advertised.

The DAILY EGYPTIAN urges SIUC to make changes and start advocating for its students before the DOL has to, and applauds the DOL for cracking down on in-compliant employers.

This enforcement might cut down the number of internships offered, but we prefer quality over quantity.

And, is it so wrong for companies to structure paid internships like a job?

That's really the point, you know.

'Super Street Fighter IV' worthy addition to franchise

DEREK ROBBINS
Daily Egyptian

Title: "Super Street Fighter IV"
Developer: Dimps and Capcom
Publisher: Capcom
Platforms: PS3, Xbox 360
ESRB Rating: T (13+)
Score: 4.5 out of 5

For players looking for a fight, "Super Street Fighter IV" is the best fighting game on the market.

"Super Street Fighter IV" serves as an add-on to 2008's "Street Fighter IV." The title adds 10 new fighters as well as new gameplay modes for a reduced price tag of $40.

Very little has changed since the original "Street Fighter IV," so those who purchased the original might find the $40 a bit steep, but it's worth the money.

"Super Street Fighter IV" is a traditional two-dimensional fighting game. The characters have 3-D models, but all the fighting takes place on a 2-D plane. It is a fairly easy game to pick up, and those who haven't played a "Street Fighter" title since "Street Fighter II" hit arcades can easily jump back in.

The title adds 10 new fighters, which brings the roster to 35 characters. This is massive for a fighting game and adds new balance to the gameplay. Certain characters must adapt new strategies for the new characters, which adds replay value.

There are also new gameplay modes added into "Super Street Fighter IV." Fans of the old-school "Street Fighter" titles will be happy to see car breaking and barrel busting mini-games. These are fun diversions but are mostly just there for the nostalgia bomb.

The really interesting new gameplay modes all involve online play. There is an endless battle that allows the player to keep playing through a rotating group of eight players. There are team battles, which allow players to work cooperatively and an option to watch other uploaded battles. The watch mode is very handy for new players or those looking to improve with a certain character.

While this seems like a lot of new content, some players may still be thrown off by the release of this game. Dating back to "Street Fighter II," Capcom has released add-ons to its various "Street Fighter" titles, only adding a few tweaks; it's become expected.

Several genres of games release sequels with less additional content than this title and charge full price. Yes, "Super Street Fighter IV" does not try to disguise itself as a sequel, but the number of characters added drastically changes the gameplay and as fans of fighters know, that is the most important aspect.

For those who never took the jump and bought "Street Fighter IV," "Super Street Fighter IV" is an absolute must-buy. The additional content as well as the reduced price tag makes this a bargain. "Super Street Fighter IV" is the definitive fighting game of this console generation.

'A Nightmare On Elm Street' nothing more than a nightmare

"A Nightmare on Elm Street"

Directed by: Samuel Bayer

Starring: Jackie Earle Haley,

Kyle Gallner, Rooney Mara,

Katie Cassidy, Thomas Dekker

Runtime: 95 min.

Rated: R

Score: 1.5 out of 5

The slogan for "A Nightmare on Elm Street" is "never sleep again." But getting killed while sleeping would be a lot more enjoyable than sitting through this movie again.

Why? Because the audience wants to see a horror film and this is nothing but a phony: a mirage of what horror films once were and a representation of how bad the genre has become.

Practically a shot-for-shot remake of the original 1984 classic, the new "Nightmare" follows a group of students whose dreams are haunted by Freddy Krueger. Freddy has a beef with these kids for turning him in for his sick, child-molesting past which ultimately led to his execution. Donning a leather glove reinforced with knife blades, he takes his aggression out on the teenagers by killing them in their dreams.

Sounds ridiculous, but the original movie made it work. The way to make a crazy concept work is to not hold back. Go over the top. Make it sick. Offend people.

The new "Nightmare" does none of this. Minus some cursing and an occasional flashback to the original, the film never gets in the viewer's face. There are long stretches where little happens and the plot does not progress. Freddy has a twisted background and is an extremely interesting villain, but his story is lazily thrown together in the last half hour. The rest of the movie involves teenagers falling in and out of dreams and running from Freddy.

There are moments of brilliance, such as when Jesse (Thomas Dekker) watches Kris (Katie Cassidy) rise into the air, screaming in her sleep. Her chest is slashed and blood spatters the wall and Jesse. She then falls back into the bed and there is a shocking silence.

One reason this scene works is the music. It does not press on the viewer. It is quiet and chilling but intense at the same time. The score can dictate how the viewer feels, but too much of it becomes a burden.

The fact that the film must go out of its way to cause a reaction shows the script could not do it. With nothing to be scared of, the movie becomes nothing more than a psychological trip.

But it fails at this as well. Where are the intense side effects of sleep deprivation? The mental instability? The depression? The slurred speech and tremors? It is missing, partly because of the lifeless acting from the C-list cast, but also because of the poor writing.

The only redeeming factor is Jackie Earle Haley's performance of Freddy. Haley is developing a reputation of playing abnormal characters and this will only add to his résumé.

Be sure to grab some popcorn or an ICEE when seeing "A Nightmare on Elm Street." It may be the only enjoyable part.

"If I start stressing out, I'm going to lose sight of what I need to do, and then I'll probably fail," he said. "So I'm just going to relax, take it easy and studying without overwhelming myself."

Alex Rude, a junior from Rockford studying English, said although the library hours are extended, she would spend most of her studying inside of her room. She said the library can become too busy to work at, and the noise can become distracting.

Tullis said the extended hours for finals in the library have been very popular in the past, with up to 80 students staying at the library until the 3 a.m. closing time.

"We see more of them make it to the end there, and usually they're more stressed out by the hour," she said.

Keenan Altman, a junior from Chicago studying psychology, said he used the extended hours last fall and was able to get most of his work done then but was unsure if he would take advantage of the hours this year.

"Although I got stuff done last year, I had to deal with people talking on their cell phones, chatting with one another and watching videos on YouTube," he said. "It's a little more distracting than sitting in your room alone."

Altman said although he may not use the extended hours too much, he appreciates the opportunity for students.

"It makes me feel good knowing that someone cares about the students like that," he said. "It's as though the university is saying, 'We care about you guys.'"

CALI

The amount of unpaid internships, replacement of workers with interns and lack of legal protection are all major concerns with labor laws, said Ross Eisenbrey, vice president for the Economic Policy Institute.

"There should not be unpaid internships in for-profit businesses — It's illegal except in a very narrow category," Eisenbrey said. "As a general rule, I think non-profits should not be employing people and not paying them."

Eisenbrey said the main need for reform is to provide access to low-income students who have been excluded from the process for too long.

The Institute's proposals include a way to provide financial assistance to low-income students seeking internships at federal or not-for-profit institutions.

In the California case, students enrolled in Year Up Inc., a not-for-profit organization that helps people from low-income communities with high school diplomas advance in their educational careers.

From there, the student goes through a five-month learning and development phase before interning at a for-profit or not-for-profit institution for six months, according to the opinion. Because of the educational experience, the for-profit institutions are not required to pay interns.

The U.S. Department of Education and the DOL should unite to ensure internships are educational, not work, said Krissi Geary-Boehm, internship coordinator for the College of Mass Communication and Media Arts.

Colleges need to take an active role in internships to assure the student is having an educational experience, she said.

"(The California ruling) is a very detailed opinion and I think

There should not be unpaid internships for-profit businesses — it's illegal except in a very narrow category.

— Ross Eisenbrey
vice president for the Economic Policy Institute

It kind of sums up the way I feel about it," Geary-Boehm said. "I think it does have to be an educational experience. I think there does need to be the college's involvement with faculty and staff both where the students have mentors and someone to come to with concerns."

Geary-Boehm, also a lawyer, said the opinion did a good job of clarifying how a company can benefit from an intern's work as long as the intern is benefitting as well.

Meanwhile, Eisenbrey's organization has proposed reforms to the law, one of which would require institutions to weigh the per-hour cost of an intern to the per-hour benefit of having an intern. If the cost exceeds the benefits, then it could qualify as an unpaid internship.

It also asks for Congress to pass legislation that would expand anti-discriminatory and harassment protections to interns.

Some employers will come up with elaborate payment schemes to try to keep paid interns off the books, Geary-Boehm said.

"If you're not on the books, the (Americans with Disabilities Act) doesn't kick in, anti-discrimination laws don't kick in, anti-harassment laws don't kick in, so basically you're doing the job of a full-time employee without any of the protections," she said.

"We joked with him (during senior day) saying, 'Oh, you graduated too,' Wilson said.

Cosgrove served as an assistant coach for SIU's regular-season Gateway championship in 1991, as well as its Missouri Valley Conference titles in 2004 and 2005. He was also a part of all six of the Salukis' NCAA Tournament teams in 1991, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006 and 2007.

Cosgrove, who is the last Saluki assistant to coach under both Brechtelbauer and Blaylock, the only two head coaches in the history of the softball program, said the consistency of the coaching staff has been a key in the program's success.

"I've coached with Coach B. Kerri, Buddy (Foster), Gary Buckels, and now Christy (Connover) and Jen (Sewell), and that's all the coaching staff since the program began," Cosgrove said. "It's important that you have consistency for the kids' sake and the program's sake."

But Cosgrove said he knew it was his time to step aside and give someone else an opportunity to get into coaching.

"There's a lot of young female athletes out there that want to get into coaching," Cosgrove said. "They need an opportunity. I don't know what Kerri's going to do, whether she'll bring somebody in or not, but ... I've had all the fun for 22 years, so I'll let them start having some fun."

Cosgrove said he does not have any expectations for the team heading into the final weeks of the season.

"I've never been one for a lot of glory-seeking and accolades and recognition. That doesn't matter to me," Cosgrove said. "Probably the best rewards I've gotten over the years were the vicarious rewards where two or three ... years later somebody will come back and say, 'Do you realize what you did for me?' That's the best reward there is."

"In past years, we've made some solid late runs as we head into the tournament," Callahan said. "Hopefully, what we've done in the last seven games is indicative of what's to come. There's no way to predict that, but I like some of the things we've been doing recently — offensively, defensively and sometimes on the mound."

The Salukis lead the conference with 497 hits so far this year, and with three more, the team will have 500 or more hits in a season for the 15th consecutive year.

SIU is second in the Missouri Valley Conference with a .309 team batting average — 0.09 behind Indiana State — and ranks in the league's top five in 10 other offensive categories.

Through 44 games this year, SIU has hit 43 homers.

Senior catcher Tyler Bullock has 10 homers this season and 27 for his career, tied for fourth all-time at SIU.

Sophomore first baseman Chris Serritella led the league in home runs until Saturday, when Evansville junior third baseman Cody Fick hit his 13th of the year at Creighton.

Serritella, however, has an active hit streak of 15 games heading into Champaign. Serritella has batted .433 at the plate during the streak, which is the longest at SIU since Bret Meugeri put together an equivalent streak in 2008.

Taking the mound for SIU today will be the team's only returning senior starting pitcher from last season, left-hander Jimmy Cornell.

Cornell (1-3) has struck out more batters than any Saluki pitcher so far this year (32), but has walked a team-high 27 batters.

In his last start, Cornell was shelled for seven runs off six hits through 1.1 innings.

SIU holds a 27-22 advantage in the all-time series against the Fighting Illini, but the Salukis have played at Illinois only three times in the last 10 years and won only once.

"We hate to put any more importance on a midweek game against Illinois as opposed to SEMO or Murray State," Callahan said. "But I think that down deep, it is a bigger game."

The first pitch is scheduled for 6 p.m. today under the lights at Illinois Field. The Weather Channel forecast predicts temperatures to be in the low to mid 70s with no chance of precipitation.

Horoscopes

By Nancy Black and Stephanie Clement

Today's birthday — This year you can use your dreams to amplify personal power in your social life and career. Dreams provide a rich source of symbols and archetypal characters to spice up your writing and conversation. Record them and note their subliminal potency.

Aries (March 21-April 19) — Today is a 7 — Because you've done your homework, your sales pitch strikes just the right note. You convince with practical observations that show you understand your audience.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) — Today is a 6 — Social activities are on today's agenda. Some travel may be required for you or a guest. Consider comfort over speed. Confirm all reservations.

Gemini (May 21-June 21) — Today is an 8 — Your intuition is right on the money concerning career matters. Everything turns out brilliantly, so pay attention and take action.

Cancer (June 22-July 22) — Today is a 5 — You or your partner may have waited for approval from a distant associate. Now you see opportunities everywhere. Advantageous outcomes are given.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) — Today is a 6 — Put yourself in the driver's seat at work. Leadership is essential to making deadline. Promise nothing unless you plan to deliver soon. Focus on integrity.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Today is a 5 — Consider your partner's needs early in the day. Once they're taken care of, allies will help you identify opportunities and choose which to pursue.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Today is a 7 — When you begin work today, soften the focus in order to perceive subliminal images. Then move on to practical matters and communicate with simple language.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Today is an 8 — You get a chance to flex your creative muscle while convincing your partner that you're on the right track. Communication strengthens the foundation of your ideas.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Today is a 6 — You wake up with the desire to stay home with family. There's work to be done, and you probably need to get to it, take off early.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Today is a 7 — Deliver each message with clarity and compassion. Your desire to convince others requires no coercion.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Today is a 7 — A powerful person in the group offers an assignment that leads to a nice self-esteem boost when you see your name on the final result.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) — Today is a 6 — The boss has a very specific agenda. You see broader opportunities but need to stick with the program. A lot is accomplished in a short time.

MEN'S GOLF

Salukis fill senior shoes

RYAN SIMONIN
Daily Egyptian

The SIU men's golf team is losing four seniors to graduation, leaving the team stripped of leadership, and three junior college transfers will be expected to pick up the slack.

The Salukis graduate Patrick Scheil, Jordan Cox, Blake Driskell and Clay Yates, leaving the team young with two freshmen and two sophomores.

In the past week, the Salukis signed some much-needed experience in Richie Williams, Jamie Stocks and Jared Harp, who are transfers from Mississippi Gulf Coast Community College, John A. Logan Community College and Rend Lake College, respectively, along with freshman George Tate from Springfield High School.

Head coach Leroy Newton said he is excited with this year's recruiting class and has high hopes for next season.

He said he hopes the recruits coming in will bring with them good work habits and a leadership role for the rest of the team.

"We are going to miss having the seniors on the team," Newton said. "But we have a great recruiting class coming in along with the youth we have already, and I think we are going to be as good as or even a little better than this past year."

Aside from the newly recruited class, Newton said the team is going to be very busy over the summer session as everybody has their own schedule of tournaments they will compete in.

Freshman Jeff Miller said there isn't anywhere to play in his hometown of Centralia, so he was planning to visit fellow freshman and teammate Jake Erickson and play with him in Springfield.

"Jake and I have been planning for me to come up to Springfield a couple of times over the summer so we can play some rounds on some tough golf courses," Miller said. "I also am going to be playing in 12-14 tournaments over the summer, because I want to play difficult golf courses so I can become more consistent for the fall season."

Erickson said this summer will be a perfect opportunity to concentrate on his golf game. He said he is excited to be playing in tournaments over the summer and practicing since he will not be taking any classes.

"I feel like my swing has come a long way since I came here to SIU, and I hope to build on that and my experiences that I have had in my first year here," Erickson said. "I am looking forward to working on my weaknesses and hopefully working with Coach (Newton) over this next summer."

Erickson said he would play in the Nike Amateur tour during the summer that travels throughout the Midwest.

According to a CBS report Monday, the Chicago Bulls will cut ties with Vinny Del Negro on Tuesday. Del Negro took the team to back-to-back playoff appearances and finished 62-62 in two seasons as the team's head coach. What do you think of the move?

STILE T. SMITH
smith@dailyegyptian.com

Avery, Avery, Avery! I'm so glad the VON era is over, and it would be in the best interest of the team to hire former Dallas coach Avery Johnson. Johnson knows how to coach a fast-paced offense, and he would be just what the Bulls need. Now Vinny can go and help another team underperform.

rsimonin@dailyegyptian.com

The Bulls are on their way up, so they can afford to let him go. They are in a position where they can get somebody so much better than Del Negro. As for him, he'll live to coach another day. He did a decent job for it being his first time as head coach.

RAY MCGILLIS
mcgillis@dailyegyptian.com

He obviously had issues with the team's management, but he did his job well and brought the team to the playoffs in both seasons. He's young and likely has a long career ahead of him, but because a few people can't get along, it won't be in Chicago. The real question is: Who is going to replace him?

'Skip' enjoys final run with Salukis

Softball assistant to retire after 21 years with team

STILET. SMITH
Daily Egyptian

Last weekend's final home series for the SIU softball team did not only mark the final time four seniors would play in Carbondale.

It also marked the final time Mark "Skip" Cosgrove would coach at SIU.

Cosgrove, in his 21st season as a member of the Saluki softball coaching staff, announced he would retire following this season.

Cosgrove said it was tough to decide when to retire, because no matter when he decided it was time to leave the program he would be leaving a group of players behind.

"It took me almost a year to make the decision, and I really labored over it," Cosgrove said. "Whatever senior class it would have been, they're all great kids."

Cosgrove, a 1974 graduate of SIU, also spent 29 years at SIU's Plant and Service Operations, where he coordinated the university's ADA compliance projects. He earned his bachelor's degree in environmental sciences in 1974 and then received a master's degree in outdoor recreation in 1986.

Head coach Kerri Blaylock said Cosgrove has been a huge key to the success of the softball program.

Assistant softball coach Mark "Skip" Cosgrove walks through the Saluki dugout Saturday during an 8-5 victory over the University of Northern Iowa at Charlotte West Stadium. Cosgrove will end his 21-year stint as assistant coach on the Saluki softball staff at the end of this season.

"He's not only just a colleague, but a good friend of mine," Blaylock said. "He's been so instrumental in this program's success, everything from coaching to doing the little things that nobody sees, to being just a good guy who listens to me vent sometimes."

Blaylock said it would be weird not to see Cosgrove in the dugout with her next season. Cosgrove became an assistant coach under Kay Brechtelsbauer a season before Blaylock came on board.

During his time with the Salukis, Cosgrove has helped the team achieve a 708-337-2 record. Cosgrove primarily worked with the outfielders during most of his tenure with the Salukis.

Senior right fielder Katie Wilson said she built a ton of memories with Cosgrove, who was the outfield coach during her first three seasons at SIU.

Two .500 teams meet up in interstate rivalry

Salukis riding five-game win streak

RAY MCGILLIS
Daily Egyptian

The Salukis will attempt to push their record above .500 for the second time this year at 6 p.m. today against the University of Illinois in Champaign.

The Fighting Illini (20-20) beat SIU, 5-4, earlier this season at Rent One Park in Marion.

Head coach Dan Callahan said the team played with little emotion through the first seven innings in its previous game against Illinois this year.

"I didn't like the way we played in the last game," Callahan said. "If you were to walk into the ballpark in the eighth or ninth inning in that game, you would say, 'That team came to play.' We need to play with more intensity and a little more fire under our rear-ends earlier this time and not suddenly decide to turn it on at the very end."

That loss began a five-game losing streak for the Salukis (22-22) — the longest for the team this year.

Since the skid, the Salukis have won six of their last seven games.

Callahan said it has been a "tale of two teams" in the last three weeks for the team, but it has shown a sense of resiliency.
